SRDC ITEMS OF INTEREST

Having Health Insurance Appears to be Related More to Income than to Employment

In the U.S., health care is primarily tied to employment. It would make sense, then, that as employment increases so would the rates of those who have health insurance. However, SRDC Research Associate Roberto Gallardo has found that as the number of people employed goes up in rural counties so does the rate of uninsured. Moreover, there is no relationship between the rate of uninsured and the rate of employment in urban counties. In his article at the Daily Yonder, Gallardo asserts that health insurance rates are more closely related to poverty rates than employment rates. Special Edition of eNews Answers Questions about e-Commerce Webinars and Mini-Grants eNews, the newsletter for the National e-Commerce Extension Initiative, has released a special edition dedicated to the Fall 2009 Webinar Series and Program Implementation Mini-Grants. Both efforts are sponsored by the Southern Rural Development Center. Showcasing curricula from the e-commerce Learning Center, these programs seek to expand the application of e-commerce strategies by small businesses, entrepreneurs, and others. The Webinar Series is open to all Extension educators, entrepreneurs, small business owners, community development professionals, community leaders, and others having an interest in e-commerce strategies. The companion Mini-Grants program is limited to Extension educators who are part of our nation's land-grant university system. Learn more about both exciting programs by reading October's Special Edition eNews at <http://srdc.msstate.edu/ecommerce/enews/sept09.html>.

New SRDC Brief Proclaims that "The South Does Not Make You Fat"

By now it is common knowledge that America is fat. Two-thirds of adults, according to a recent study, are overweight or obese, up from 15 percent in 1980. It is also frequently reported that obesity rates are higher in the South, but can region itself be a contributing factor? Researchers Patricia A. Duffy, Claire Zizza, and Henry Kinnucan asked this question in their recent paper "Nutrition, Food Security, and Obesity among Low-Income Residents of the South," and they found that the South does not make you fat. Providing this exciting research in an accessible and brief format, the SRDC is pleased to announce its new Food Assistance and Nutrition Information Series as a part of the Economic Research Service's Research Innovation and Development Grants in Economics (RIDGE) program. The first report "The South Does Not Make You Fat: A Study of Nutrition, Food Security, and Obesity" [PDF] is currently available at http://srdc.msstate.edu/opportunities/ridge/07briefs/south_does_not_make_you_fat.pdf. Additional topics such as Rural Senior Diets, Baby Formula Preparation by WIC Mothers, and who is receiving SNAP will soon be released. Home is Where the Heart is – and the Money, Too

Politicians and policy makers sweating over how to jump-start economic growth may want to start studying a new equation emerging Tuesday from U.S. research: $L + P = $$. Translated, it means that communities able to inspire loyalty and passion among residents are also likely to see a swell in their financial outlook. These findings are being touted as critical information for community leaders across the United States and Canada working to engineer an economic rebound. Learn more about this research at

More Children Fall Into Poverty as Family Incomes Shrink

Poverty rose in the West and Midwest last year, as slowdowns in housing and manufacturing sent more families below the poverty line, according to a Census Bureau report released Tuesday. The report, part of the agency's annual American Community Survey, was the latest to measure the recession's toll on low-income families, after a boom in which low-skilled workers relied on plentiful jobs and overtime -- often in construction and retail -- to raise their incomes and prospects. The bureau said poverty rates overall increased in 31 states and the District of Columbia in 2008, compared with poverty-rate increases in 10 states in 2007. Read more at

Brown Assumes Leadership of Extension Rural and Traditional Programs

Paul Brown of Iowa State University has been selected as the Alabama Cooperative Extension System's associate director for rural and traditional programs. He will be responsible for providing statewide leadership for Extension's rural programming effort, which encompasses agriculture, community and economic development, family and consumer sciences, forestry and wildlife sciences and 4-H and is delivered through the system's 67 county offices, six Extension and research centers and other centers located throughout the state. An integral part of his efforts will involve working with other Extension administrators and educators and local community leaders to develop a strategic vision for new rural programs in an era of new funding streams for Extension and rapid economic and social change. Brown has served as assistant director for Agriculture and Natural Resources for Iowa State University Extension since 2004. He will assume his new role at Auburn in November. Choices Magazine Shares Agricultural and Applied Economics Research

Choices: The Magazine of Food, Farm, and Resource Issues, the Agricultural and Applied Economics Association's policy magazine, makes research findings accessible to the public. Published quarterly, Choices typically contains two themes, each of which highlight the economic and policy implications of a selected topic of potential interest to decision makers in the public and private sectors. Choices is free to read online at www.choicesmagazine.org. The most recent issue contains one theme on Emerging Issues in Food Safety, and another on Emerging Countries: Converging or Diverging Economies. A related AAEA product is Policy Issues (<http://aaea.org/publications/policy-issues/>), an online series of articles presenting economic analyses on policy topics currently under consideration. The most recent one addresses Agriculture and Greenhouse Gas Cap-and-Trade. To subscribe, simply send an e-mail to Outreach@aaea.org and ask to subscribe to Choices and/or Policy Issues.
