

Getting Through Tough Times

Identifying Sources of Support and Friendship

GTTT-12

The Support Network

People experiencing tough times report they feel better if they have the support of family and friends. Your informal support networks are the personal ties you have with others. Friends, relatives and other people you turn to for comfort, advice or help are your “support system.”

Your informal support network helps in many ways. For example, a support person:

- Listens to your concerns.
- Helps think about alternative plans and brainstorm ideas.
- Comforts you when you’re down.
- Helps with material needs.

Identifying Your Support Network

To help you identify your support network, answer the following questions. Write in the names of people who give you support:

- Who listens to you when you need someone to talk to?
- With whom do you share good or bad news?
- Who appreciates you?
- Who appreciates you for what you do?
- Who stands up for you, even when they might not totally agree with what you’re doing?

- When you need advice, to whom do you go?
- When you have a problem, to whom do you turn?
- Who helps you make decisions when you need to think through options and consequences?

The people you named for each of these questions are an important part of your life; you depend on them. They form your informal support network. In turn, you also give them support.

As you look over the people you named, ask yourself these questions:

- Are there one or two people (spouse or friend) whose name shows up often? Are you leaning too heavily on these members of your support network?
- Do you have needs that are not being met? Which of these needs are most important to you now?
- Who else could fill the needs you have?
- Who could help you meet your needs if you were to take the risk of asking?
- What specific steps could you take to expand your support network? What things can you do this week? Next week?

Building A Support Network

Part of your daily goal should be making friendships that will add to your support network. This process is like making a patchwork quilt; a variety of pieces are added over the years. Sometimes an unusual piece adds some special quality that you had not expected. Sometimes you may need to patch over places where the material has faded or worn thin.

Supportive friendships often come about indirectly from working and socializing with others. In order for this to occur, it is often necessary to first reach out to others by:

- Taking time for your family.
- Volunteering your time to community groups and organizations.
- Visiting your neighbors.
- Joining a club or hobby group.

Your support system may help you through the stress of a personal financial crisis. By reaching out to others and taking advantage of their support and friendship, you can gain strength to deal with your problems and an ability to take control of your situation.

In addition to your personal support network, you can use community agencies for support. See the fact sheet in this series, Community Agencies That Can Help, for community services that are available.

Getting Through Tough Times is a multi-part series for individuals and families experiencing personal/financial crises.

Contact your local Cornell Cooperative Extension office for copies of other fact sheets in this series. The address and phone number can be found in the yellow pages of your phone book under “governmental offices – county.”

www.cce.cornell.edu

www.resilientcommunities.com

Cornell Cooperative Extension provides equal program and employment opportunities. NYS College of Agriculture and Life Sciences, NYS College of Human Ecology, and NYS College of Veterinary Medicine at Cornell University, Cooperative Extension associations, county governing bodies, and U.S. Department of Agriculture, cooperating.

Adapted with permission from Getting Through Tough Times, University of Illinois Extension (2001). Prepared by Barbara J. Bristow, Extension Associate, Department of Policy Analysis and Management, Cornell University, and Linda Ballard, student intern.

Information from Managing Between Jobs: Identifying Sources of Support and Friendship, by Joan E. LeFebvre, Professor, Family Development Department, University of Wisconsin-Extension, Vilas, Forest and Florence Counties. With permission, adapted for Illinois by Charlotte Crawford and Lois E. Smith, Consumer and Family Economics Educators, University of Illinois Extension, 1/94. Reviewed by Kay Mayberry and Cammy Seguin, Family Life Educators, University of Illinois Extension, 2/99. Copyright 1999, University of Illinois.